The Risk Report focuses on the potential character blindspots (counter-productive tendencies) that potentially pose a risk to an organisation. The report serves as a general indication of risk potential based on economic crime research in the South African financial industry and seven dimensions relating to integrity at work. As no human is wholly virtuous, each person exposes an organisation to some extent of risk. Risk, however, is context specific.

A Financial Controller, for example, should be risk averse, yet a degree of risk-taking may be tolerated in a Strategic Leadership position. To inform your decision regarding the degree of acceptable risk, it is therefore advised to apply these risk indicators in relation to the organisation's risk culture, the given position's risk-tolerance and the rest of the behavioural information in this integrated report.

* Note that when in the green zone, the particular factor in isolation does not pose a significant risk i.t.o. economic crime. A score of below 10 on any of the Key Factors in combination with one or more other below-average Key scores may however contribute towards a greater economic crime risk.

Ntembeko did not score significantly lower than most other people on any one of the four main risk-indicator scores.

Due to a slight inclination towards a subjective approach, Ntembeko may occasionally tend to rationalise counterproductive behaviour in situations where the consequences thereof may potentially have a negative impact at work. Ntembeko appears to slightly prefer a big-picture approach rather than repetitive- or detail tasks. Although the individual may often portray the ability to perform tedious tasks, mistakes may occasionally be made when having to concentrate continuously for a while. Furthermore, Ntembeko appears slightly more likely than others to engage in risk-taking or impulsive behaviour.

Based on the particular combination of characteristics, the individual seems more likely than most others to portray behaviour related to high economic crime risk.
