The Risk Report focuses on the potential character blindspots (counter-productive tendencies) that potentially pose a risk to an organisation. The report serves as a general indication of risk potential based on economic crime research in the South African financial industry and seven dimensions relating to integrity at work. As no human is wholly virtuous, each person exposes an organisation to some extent of risk. Risk, however, is context specific.

A Financial Controller, for example, should be risk averse, yet a degree of risk-taking may be tolerated in a Strategic Leadership position. To inform your decision regarding the degree of acceptable risk, it is therefore advised to apply these risk indicators in relation to the organisation's risk culture, the given position's risk-tolerance and the rest of the behavioural information in this integrated report.

* Note that when in the green zone, the particular factor in isolation does not pose a significant risk i.t.o. economic crime. A score of below 10 on any of the Key Factors in combination with one or more other below-average Key scores may however contribute towards a greater economic crime risk.

Felicia scored below average on two of the four main risk-indicator scores.

Based on an orientation towards a subjective approach, Felicia seems more likely than most to rationalise counterproductive behaviour in situations where the consequences thereof may potentially have a negative impact at work. It seems as though Felicia may have a tendency to withhold or manipulate information. Felicia may believe that the way in which things are said is more important than the true message. A lack of judgement may occasionally lead to counterproductive behaviour to benefit self or close ones.

Based on Felicia's level of optimism, it appears as though the individual's moral judgement may currently be clouded as a result of personal-or work-related circumstances. Additional probing may confirm. Subsequently, appropriate intervention may enhance Felicia's judgement to a degree.

The individual's psychometric profile appears to be skewed. Combined with a tendency to lack optimism, it is likely that Felicia is very self-critical which may negatively influence the manner in which the individual responds to psychometric questionnaires. Additional probing may confirm.

Based on the particular combination of characteristics, the individual seems more likely than most others to portray behaviour related to high economic crime risk.
