The Risk Report focuses on the potential character blindspots (counter-productive tendencies) that potentially pose a risk to an organisation. The report serves as a general indication of risk potential based on economic crime research in the South African financial industry and seven dimensions relating to integrity at work. As no human is wholly virtuous, each person exposes an organisation to some extent of risk. Risk, however, is context specific.

A Financial Controller, for example, should be risk averse, yet a degree of risk-taking may be tolerated in a Strategic Leadership position. To inform your decision regarding the degree of acceptable risk, it is therefore advised to apply these risk indicators in relation to the organisation's risk culture, the given position's risk-tolerance and the rest of the behavioural information in this integrated report.

* Note that when in the green zone, the particular factor in isolation does not pose a significant risk i.t.o. economic crime. A score of below 10 on any of the Key Factors in combination with one or more other below-average Key scores may however contribute towards a greater economic crime risk.

Khanya scored below average on one of the four main risk-indicator scores.

Based on Khanya's orientation towards a subjective approach, the individual may struggle to distinguish right from wrong which may impede moral decision-making in certain situations. Additionally, Khanya may not always portray a tendency to take accountability for own actions. Khanya may tend to be perceived as sensitive and suspicious of others' intentions. Furthermore, the individual may appear somewhat biased during interpersonal communication.

Based on the particular combination of characteristics, the individual seems more likely than most others to portray behaviour related to high economic crime risk.
